

Proposal

The topic that interests me is ghosts, and reincarnation. Basically, once we die our souls either reincarnate into another form or remain stuck, manifesting as ghosts. This fascinates me because it blends both spiritual beliefs and even some scientific principles (in my opinion) which makes an interesting exploration. The main concept, or “fact” is that energy cannot be created or destroyed, only transferred. I believe that it can be connected to the human soul, as humans have their own energies.

What is the fictitious truth, and why is this of interest to me?

Basically, there's the scientific principle that energy cannot be created, destroyed or anything like that. It can only be transferred or transformed. For example, when a dynamite explodes, that is chemical energy, and then it's converted into kinetic energy with sound, and heat. Similarly, (or maybe not so) the human soul, upon death, can undergo a transformation. Maybe into another form or existence, which is interesting as it suggests that the soul persist after death, even when the body no longer functions.

There are religions like Hinduism that believe the soul is immortal. According to Hindu beliefs, the soul (Atman) is never destroyed but instead moves from one life to the next through reincarnation. This (I believe) aligns with the idea of energy, suggesting that the soul is simply transferred. Other belief systems, such as certain branches of Buddhism, also support the idea of reincarnation, while Western cultures often focus more on the concept of an afterlife in heaven or hell, or on the manifestation of ghosts when a soul fails to transition properly.

The concept of ghost is interesting as well, what are they? How did they get here? It could be answered by looking at the idea of reincarnation, some souls will be transferred while others may remain stuck, which could allude to ghosts.

The Fictitious Organization/Entity Presenting the Material:

The fictitious organization dedicates itself to studying the human soul, life after death, and the science of energy transfer. It would combine scientific inquiry with spiritual exploration, the team would consist of experts from various fields working together to investigate how energy transfers after death and whether there is any evidence of souls being reborn or remaining earthbound as ghosts. They would present this through a website, with podcasts or research articles.

How Could This Project Become a “Benevolent Untruth”?

It could become a “benevolent untruth” as it provides comfort and meaning to people who are afraid of the unknowns of death. And while we may not have definitive proof of life after death, it offers hope for continuity and maybe people would find closure to lost loved ones. And as mentioned before, this isn’t proven, and no one knows what happens after death even with the extensive research done. Making this project, a “benevolent untruth.”
